SALT LAKE WOMAN DESCRIBES CHARMS OF PARIS, THE MECCA OF AMERICA

Paris from the viewpoint of a Salt Laker—one who can duly appreciate the cleanliness and order of the streets. The beauties and enchantments of the gay city are set forth for the benefit of Americans who are not good enough to wait till they die before seeing the "Clean City."

the Bon Marche, where the prices are invariably raised in summer as soon as the pilgrimage begins. They tip indiscriminately—porters and cabmen and waiters. They give 25 centimes pour-boire in a cafe where a Frenchman would only give 10. It has gotten to be a custom that whenever a Frenchman looks at an American he expects a tip, or vice versa. It is said that in a certain cafe on the bouleas the pilgrimage begins. They tip indiscriminately—porters and cabmen and waiters. They give 25 centimes pour-boire in a cafe where a Frenchman would only give 10. It has gotten to be a custom that whenever a Frenchman looks at an American he expects a tip, or vice versa. It is said that in a certain cafe on the boulevards you are expected to tip the files that light on your collar. We certainly are an amusing people, and the won-things under certain circumstances, and no possible or impossible combination would cause them to have the bad taste to do otherwise. There are so many different kinds of us, from the north, south, east, and west, and according as the fancy strikes us we are apt to do all sorts of outrageous things. We, as a nation, are impatient of restraint and don't like to take the good advice to do as the Romans do, when we are in Rome. For example, no one here but peasants and servants go around bareheaded, but that fact, well known, doesn't prevent many American girls and their "mommers" from parading up and down in front of their hotels in the evening, elaborately dressed and bareheaded. Some of the American papers here have criticised them pretty rudely. The French papers are too polite, possibly, but one can imagine what they say in private. There is also a disagreeable custom Frenchmen have of staring at women alone in the street, and sometimes workmen, or men of the lower class, will push you with their elbows. It isn't pleasant, but the only way is to ignore it. An American girl who was jostled in that way not long sinee turned around and slapped the man in Paris, fairest city of the continent; Paris the care-free, Paris the gay; Paris, as the old French sons has it, "where a man always feels single."

If the fascination once gets into the blood it is like the smell of the sea to an old sait. It draws and draws one forever back again. A bright American woman, who has lived many years abroad and who loathes London as much as she does Paris, as she expresses it, said the other day that the longest road in the world was the one leaving London for Paris, and the shortest, any road leading out of Paris, However, all Americans are not of this opinion, and many like London as well as Paris; but I haven't heard many say that they liked London better than Paris. The old adage that good Americans go to Paris when they die should be changed up to date, for good Americans are anticipating their paradise here below, to judge from the troops of them in the hotels, on the boulewards, in the galleries—everywhere.
Personally conducted tourists, or "firsters," as a humorous Washingtonian calls them—those who are abroad for the first time and are engaged in comparing Wanamaker's with the Magazine du Louvre, or Marshall Field's with the Bon Marche, and who also are incidentally gaining much valuable and costly experience "doing" a circular tour and "being done" in the shops where "English is spoken."

"Seconders," who know the ropes somewhat and who only occasionally get fleeced. For be it known here with that the shearing of the lambs, especially of the American breed, is one of the most artistic and successful industries of these picturesque lands. According to the genial Washingtonian, the American breed, is one of expects a tip, or vice versa. It is said that in a certain cafe on the boulevards you are expected to tip the flies that light on your collar. We certainly are an amusing people, and the wonder is that foreigners ever make us out. No two of us can be compared to any other two of us.

There is a standard, at least, by which most Englishmen can be judged. An Englishman or an English woman of the better class will do certain things under certain circumstances, and no possible or impossible combination would cause them to have the bad tagts to do otherwise. There are seen that keeps the streets the cleanest in the world, and all without noise and fuss. If we could only have some of these methods tried in our own city, even in a small way, perhaps one might hope to have the stigma given us by strangers partly removed, of having the dirtiest streets in America. The gain to the city would be well worth while in appearance and health. There is no dust in Paris, and, therefore, no mud. And a war of extermination is carried on constantly against germs of every dangerous sort.

In a moment she was surrounded by a jeering crowd and had an exceedingly unpleasant quarter of an hour, for it was the sort of a crowd in the real Paris was because Parisians and hour, for it was the sort of a crowd in the real Paris was because Parisians and hour, for it was the sort of a crowd in the third floor, and strangers never climb up so high.

Tuesday Morning Tuesday Morning

We shall present the concrete style opinions of America's foremost manufacturers and foreign designers, expressed in the tangible form of Women's Ready-to-Wear Suits. It is quite a pretentious exhibition despite the early date, and there are no duplicates anywhere of any of these special garments. FOR THE COMING SEASON we've added style touches here, raised standard of making there, chosen fabrics more happily in another, so that in every Point we're better satisfied with them than any other year's showing of the kind. Extraordinary pricing of new autumn modes.
